COMMENTS

08 Could the final unraveling be under way?

As Greece assumes the rotating Presidency of the EU Council, Antonis D. Papagiannidis takes a look at the need to press on with reforms, return to growth and convince international creditors of a sustainable debt position.
This as the banking sector faces higher non-performing loans and calls for an end to more good money being thrown after bad

42 The good and not-so-good news

Economist and author Nick Papandreou says that since the IMF got active in the country, the power of the State has increased, while whatever dynamism exists in Greece is increasingly stifled inside a growing labyrinth of red tape

ECONOMY & BONDS

14 Trying to find a footing

With the Greek economy struggling to return to growth after six years of recession and record unemployment, there are hopes of a much-needed boost in the form of further debt relief from the country's international creditors

16 Hopes for a return to the markets in 2014

The Greek government has made a return to international bond markets a prime goal of economic policy in 2014 to signal the gradual disengagement from the bailout programme and the partial assumption of sovereignty

BANKING

18 Greek banks on firmer ground but challenges abound

The Greek banking sector entered 2014 on sounder footing, but a number of challenges lie ahead, such as the privatisation of Eurobank, two rounds of loan stress tests, as well as rising non-performing loans and continued efforts to reduce funding from the ECB

By Dimitris Kontogiannis

20 Opening a can of worms

Fresh questions are raised about governance at Greek banks after more than 20 former Hellenic Postbank staff and high-profile borrowers faced criminal charges of breach of trust, fraud and money-laundering following a probe into corporate lending that exposed huge losses from unsecured loans
