COMMENTS

08 A difficult game

Antonis D. Papagiannidis likens the complex game being played out by the Greek political system over the board of the Greek economy to that of playing chess on a three-dimensional board with ever-changing pieces
By Antonis D. Papagiannidis

42 Ante portas

Economist and author Nick Papandreou says that research undertaken by an important German institute proposes –at long last– a serious haircut on the Greek debt

ECONOMY & BONDS

16 Mixed tidings

A boost to confidence in the wake of a better than expected fiscal performance in recent months and an anticipated return to economic growth this year is being tampered by uncertainty over Greece's privatisation programme and the need for further reforms

18 Greek bond rally continues

The countdown to Greece's partial access to the international debt markets has started as bond yields fell to the lowest level since the spring of 2010 and the yield curve flattened beyond 10 years

By Dimitris Kontogiannis

INVESTMENTS

22 Investors bet on Greek recovery

A growing number of foreign investors and hedge funds continue to bet on the Greek recovery story; the big question is “will they stay for the long-term or are they just looking to make a quick profit and exit?”

PRIVATISATIONS
24 Prime real estate plans

There are hopes that the former royal estate at Tatoi could be transformed into a metropolitan park for Athens, while a single bidder has emerged for the privatisation of the site of the old Athens international airport at Hellenikon
 By Kerin Hope

SHIPPING
26 Full speed ahead

Despite the fact that traditional ship financing is in retreat, a growing number of Greek shipowners are finding alternative ways to expand and modernise their fleets

SPECIAL REPORT: GREEK EU PRESIDENCIES
32 Greece at the helm of the EU

Athens' fifth Presidency of the Council of Ministers of the European Union is in many ways much different to all the previous four and is unfolding under changing, tense geopolitical developments. Dionyssi Stamboglis reviews Greece's four previous stints at the helm

TOURISM
38 Tourism to the rescue

Hopes of another record year for Greece's key tourism industry in 2014 could help spur economic recovery and create desperately needed new jobs. Tourist receipts jumped to about 12 billion euros last year, a 15 per cent increase over 2012, as almost 18 million tourists visited Greece
